Justice Beekman says the Controller should have cheyed the order of the Court, and by his disable-dience has been, in a legal sense, guilty of contumacy, and has rendered himself liable and amenable to the law for a contempt of court.

The rejuctance of the Controller to comply with the writ was, however, Justice Reekman says, due to some apprehension on his part that legal complications to the city might result, as he had received a letter in January last from the attorney for D. D. McBean and Clinton Beckwith, stating that his clients had liens upon the judgment, and asking him not to pay over the money to the plaintiffs in the action.

cheyed the order of the Court, and by his dishedence has been, in a legal sense, guilty of contumacy, and has rendered himself liable and amenable to the law for a contempt of court.

The reductance of the Controller to comply with the writ was, however, Justice Beekman says, due to some apprehension on his part that legal complications to the city might result, as he had received a letter in January last from the attorney for D. D. McBean and Clinton Beekwith, stating that his clients had lens upon the judgment, and asking him not to pay over the money to the plaintiffs in the action.

This was not sufficient, Justice Beekman holds, to arrest the action of the Controller, whom he adjudges in contempt, but time is given to the Controller to comply with the order of the Court or eiss suffer a penalty to be fixed in case of his contumacy.
